The bored, depressed girl slumped on her bed- wondering if anyone will ever notice her. Bored, bored, bored-the despondent cupboard crouched lonely as the plane flew past ; she watched it fly away from this boring, bland city.

The miserable map clung lazily on the dull wall. The extremely glum door creaked as the girl cried. The pillow sat sorrowfully on the dull bed. As the window lay bored, the town grew dark. Obviously upset, she felt her heart blaze with resentment for her parents who completely ignored her. She noticed the lamp flickering on and off but she didn't care: she just ignored it. The buildings glared mysteriously at her through the window. Almost mockingly, it started to rain. she felt the tears welling up in her eyes again. Will she always be stuck in this house? Will she ever be happy?
